

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, an able Republican paper, speaking of those who were in the late Confederate service, says:

"If one of this class is appointed to any office, or allowed to be a candidate for any local position in the South, there is a hue and cry raised about putting Confederates in power. The dissatisfied do not seem to recognize any validity in the Executive amnesty and pardon, or at least fail to comprehend that they involve full absolution. So if a man formerly prominent as a Confederate is placed in any position by the Southern people, it is quoted against them as evidence of their persistence in rebellion. Gen. Joe Johnston was recently a candidate for the Presidency of the Danville railroad in Virginia, and a majority of the stockholders voted for him, but Gov. Peirpoint got the impression in some way that his election would give offence at Washington, and so intimated to the stockholders, and the vote of the State for its stock was then given to Buford, the other candidate, thus electing him. Perhaps Buford is the best man for the position, but Gen. Johnston is one of the most eminent civil engineers in the country, and the stockholders voted for him because they thought he would best promote the interests of the company. Now, if Gen. Johnston is to be allowed to live and support himself, it is impossible to give any good reason for excluding him from the profession for which he is best fitted. We neither get indemnity for the past nor security for the future by excluding such men from the business pursuits for which they are qualified. Indeed, the employment of those who were lately Confederate commanders, in peaceful pursuits, thus giving them a personal interest in the tranquility of the country, will manifestly prove an element in our future security."
